Covenanter (A13 Mk III) restoration project – Denbies Vineyard, Dorking (UK)

Covenanter Tank T18656, built by English Electric in a 300 tank batch T18361 - T18660 in the first quarter of 1941 (Craig Moore). For unknown reasons, this tank was buried after the war on a farm near Dorking Surrey. In the early 1980s it was discovered with another tank now on display at Bovington. This one was reburied and left there till today (May, 2017) on the Denbies vineyard. It was uncovered on May 23rd, 2017. The Covenanter turret in the photo did not come with the Dorking tank. It was picked up from a British firing range

Crusader I or II (A15) wreck – Unknown location (Iraq)

The tank shown is an early example of the same initial batch of Crusaders that included the Australian Crusader in that, although the front was rebuilt with a full Mk II up-armouring, including the section that protects the front of the fighting compartment around the turret ring. It still was refitted with the original Cyclops style head lamp meaning it had to come from the batch T15546 - T15745. Most probably a rebuild of an early vehicle used in training and sent out to Iraq possibly as part of the re-equipping of the Royal Iraq Army prior to the British leaving -significantly A13 Covenanters made up the recc component of HQ when the British style Army Tank Brigade was mooted in 1940-41, 1CATB had Covenanters so possibly a re-imposition of the original Army Tank Brigade concept. As to the tank the stand off style of some of the additional plates (Steve Osfield)
